□ RIGHT: The handwriting of Olympic swimmer Lara Davenport.

My name is Lara Davenport and northern New South Wales. I may be biased but I believe Kingscliff (town) to be the most beautiful place. Everywhere in Kingscliff is within the beach - being a water baby perfectly.

I was not sure if you needed these printed or if running writing was ok, would provide you with a sample of I look forward to hearing what my about me.

Thankyou for this opportunity

Kind regards,
Lara Davenport

Handwriting test of character

BY PATRICK WILLIAMS

THE handwriting of Tweed mayor Joan van Lieshout shows a woman who is dynamic, altruistic, analytically minded with a love for culture and literature.

Kingscliff Olympic swimmer Lara Davenport and Murwillumbah-born rugby league star Anthony Laffranchi on the other write with their respective sports on their minds.

The handwriting styles of these three well-known Tweed identities went under the microscope this week, being given an analysis by world-renowned graphologist Caro Duncan.

Cr van Lieshout's handwriting style paints her as an enthusiastic, reliable, quick-thinking and sensible individual.

"I can tell she's altruistic and quite charming," Ms Duncan said.

"She's got a sharp mind and lives by her intellect. She is a traditional person with conservative values.

self originating from her handwriting.

One of Ms Duncan's notes about the Tweed mayor suggested emotions may sometimes get the better of her.

Ms Davenport's handwriting told her story like an open book.

"I can tell she's young," Ms

Duncan said.

"Very disciplined, self-controlled, methodical, focused and well developed, yet in spite of her success, she can still be self-doubtful.

Ms Davenport said she was amazed at the accuracy of her results.

"I would say she's spot on," Ms

Davenport said.

Ms Duncan said that despite the Kingscliff-born swimmer's spot in the limelight it does not feed into her ego.

She was also described as happy to go along with the crowd, a loyal and lovely friend to have and sensitive with an artistic nature.

"I love to draw, it's something I do to relax," Ms Davenport said.

According to Mr Laffranchi's handwriting, he's a people person and no-frills kind of guy.

"He likes to keep his personal life private," Ms Duncan said. "I can tell he forms good relationships and works well with other people."

Like Ms Davenport, Mr Laffranchi is not in the game for his ego.

"He's doing it because he loves the sport, but showmanship doesn't come naturally for him, and that comes back to him being a personal man," Ms Duncan said.

"He sets his goals according to what he knows he can accomplish, and he feels things quite deeply."

Ms Duncan has studied and practised graphology in Boston and in Sydney where she currently resides. She has a long history of analysing handwriting which includes the signature of US president Barack Obama.
